SAFE AVIATION WILL BE THEME OF CONFERENCE

First Nation-Wide Meeting to Discuss Flying Planned by Guggenheim Fund

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-The first nationvide conference on safety in aviation has just been arranged by the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, Harry F. Guggenheim, its president, an-

The conference will be held in New York on October 4 and 5 as a part of the seventeenth annual safety congress. It will have the co-operation of the National Safety Council, Mr. Guggenheim said.

Inasmuch as the first objective of the fund was increased safety in aviation, officials in charge of the fund have been particularly interested in organizing this first national discussion of developments relating to reliable and safe transportation by air, he added. The program will include the problem of aeronautical legislation, aircraft design and construction, adequate equipment, land-ing fields and airways, and a consideration of the aids to navigation while in flight, such as weather reporting services, position finding by radio, and safety devices of all kinds. "Outstanding authorities on aeronautical problems will present pathe Prime Minister, in an interview pers to the sessions on 37 different specialized subjects," Mr. Guggen-heim said. One farmer in central Kansas asserts that it is cheaper for him to combine his 135 acres of wheat than to use the binder-threshing method, because of the longer period required; the necessity of having two large gangs of men about for several days; and then the uncertainty of the labor market. Institute of Politics Also Is Told How Buyer-Owned Chain Stores Operate

BY A STAFF COBRESPONDENT

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass .- A new kind of chain store—one owned by consumers and run in their interest was proposed by Prof. C. R. The system has reached a high state of development in England, Belgium and the continent, and in Denmark has put private industry definitely on the de-

Dr. Buell Renews Criticism

His discussion of co-operatives ame on the same day with a new attack on the white man's treatment of the natives in Africa made by Raymond Leslie Buell, research director of the Foreign Policy Association, and also a debate over the proposed American policy in the Manchurian crisis.

Standards Here Are Cited Contrasting this with the United States, Dr. Fay admitted the higher standard of living in America. English laboring men ask, however, he said, what the American worker, with his cheap automobile and his material interests, has to equal the sense of possession and responsiin management and government found by English workers.
"Does the United States worker find social satisfaction in a system of in-dustrial autocracy and political deocracy?" he asked. The American attitude, he agreed, in answer to a question, is that the greatest service is to pay high wages. Personally, he supported the idea that democracy should enter economics. Dr. Fay added that the existence of efficient privately-owned chain stores in America would render the introducoperatives, difficult in the extreme Two widely different views of the condition of natives in Africa were presented by Dr. Buell's discussion of South Africa and by Thomas S. secretary of the Phelps-Fund, who praised in unstinted terms the work of the Fire-stone Rubber Company in Liberia. Interest in the divergence was heightened because it is known that Dr. Buell, whose 1,000,000-word report on Africa is one of the most thorough ever made on that con-tinent, is preparing to criticize the Liberian conditions shortly at the

Dr. Buell Looks to League The future of East Africa very largely rests with the League of Nations, Dr. Buell said. Former German colonies there are mandates. There is a movement to bring the white colonies and industrial condi-tions installed in Kenya and British South Africa into the territory of Tanganyika, also under British control. Dr. Buell assailed this proposal as unfair to the natives and said that the League of Nations may finally pass upon it. South Africa, where the white dominance is at its height, he continued, has a white population of 1,500,000 and 4,500,000 non-whites. Industry rests on Negro labor, he said. Wages paid to natives are extremely low-lower, in fact, than they were in 1897. The pay is fixed by the Chamber of Mines, which holds a labor monoply. The native is at a further handicap in that it is a criminal offense to desert, or to strike. The land has been taken from the natives—all but 8 per cent, he continued; so that there is not enough to support them, and they are forced to seek employment else-agency that "scours the native terri-tory and induces natives to sign labor contracts." They are then shipped to the mines, Dr. Buell said, finger-printed, and put in companies from which it is illegal to desert. Firestone Plan Is Described

Mr. Jones presented quite an op-posite view, declaring that whatever onditions in Africa were formerly, European countries are striving to better the lot of native races. Mentioning Liberia, he said the recent Firestone concession is approved by all the missionary and educational organizations there. It provides a concession of 1,000,000 of the 29,000,-000 acres in the country, the con-struction of a harbor, with money borrowed at 7 per cent, and a government issue of $5,000,000 at 7 per cent to rehabilitate the nation. A few years ago there was but one automobile in Liberia, and only a few miles of dirt road for the solitary car to bump over. Now there are 75 miles of good roads, more in prospect, and 200 motor cars.

"There is practically no cause of apprehension over the exploitation of the native," he said. "The industrial situation in Liberia is constantly being observed by missionaries and disinterested persons."

tion's dairy industry was explained by S. H. Anderson, secretary of the National Dairy Association. This or ganization is conducting the National Dairy Show here Oct. 13-20, and the plans to surpass the 1927 show in Memphis, the first national dairy show held in the South, are in keep-ing with the widespread development of the industry in this region.

"The dairying industry in the South, both from the side of plant operation and of the farmer dairyman, is progressing excellently and its future appears high," declared Mr. Anderson: "Industrial progress has brought increased population, which increases the sale of butter, milk and cream proportionately. The re-representative of the Republican sult is that the southern farmer has vice-chairman in the middle West, found a stable income that does not displace but supplements cotton growing. The New York Yankees took advantage of an idle day for the secondplace Philadelphia Athletics, Monday, to win two games against Detroit, 4 to 3, and 5 to 2. The St. Louis Browns trengthened their hold on third place by winning two against the Boston Red Sox and Cleveland regained sixth place by defeating Washington. The four clubs from fourth to seventh place, inclusive, are so close together that practically every day brings a new standing. The Chicago White Sox regained fourth place, Monday, although they did not play.

Zachary, obtained Sunday from Washington by the Yankees, pitched his new club to a victory over Detroit in the first game of the two, 4 to 3. He allowed only seven hits. Whitehill was pitching against him and he did a good piece of work, holding the league leaders to six hits. Fothergill made three of Detroit's hits, one of them a triple. Combs was the leading hitter of the second game with a double and two singles. Carroll was

AWARDS

TORONTO, Ont. (C. P.)—Ray Keech of Philadelphia won the Canadian five-mile automobile championship for dirt tracks at the Canadian National Exhibition Monday when he defeated Ralph De Palma by four car lengths in 5m. 23s. Al Aspen was third. De Palma beat Keech to the first turn and held the lead for the first seven half-mile laps. Keech, by daring driving in his Duesenberg, then took the lead, holding it to the finish.

Ruth is losing ground on his 1927 homerun pace. He is now only four ahead of his pace of last year. He has 46 to his credit now, and last year he hit his forty-sixth on Sept. 6, which is only a little over a week off.

Defeats Miss H. M. Jacobs for United States Singles Honors, 6-2, 6-1

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR FOREST HILLS N. Y.-Miss Helen N. Wills, for the fifth time in the seven years that she has been a contender. won the United States Women's tennis championship of the United States Monday, at Forest Hills Stadium: Then, for the second time. Miss Wills and Mrs. George W. Wightman, after a lapse of several years, captured the doubles title also, their previous victors begins been in 1924.

lapse of several years, captured the doubles title also, their previous victory having been in 1924.

Her opponent in the finals, Miss Helen M. Jacobs, also of Calfornia, made her first appearance in the final round of the championship Monday, and but for a persistence in sending her drives too powerfully, so that more than half of them passed over the back line, might have made the struggle closer than the score, 6-2, 6-1 reveals. As far as attacking power and skill in placing was concerned, Miss Jacobs slightly outshone the many-time champion, but her errors piled up so fast, that Miss Wills had only to stay near the back line and rely on the ball whizzing past her two or three times a game. Nineteen outs in the first set, and 18 in the second, by Miss Jacobs, gave the champion more than half of her total, 31 in each set.

In the doubles, Miss Edith A. Cross, the newest member of the young Californians, was so badly off her game that this match, in spite of the fine play of her partner, Mrs. Lawrence A. Harper, was even more one-sided, though the score was 6-2, 6-2.

MISS ROBINSON GREETED

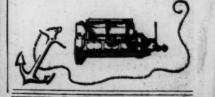

CHICAGO—Brass bands, flowers and cheering throngs welcomed the return here yesterday of Miss Elizabeth Robinson, Riverdale schoolgirl, who won the 190-meter women's dash champlonship at the Olympic Games. Classmates from the Thornton Townshin High School, teammates from the Illinois Women's Athletic Club, and city officials were at the station with her family and relatives. Miss Robinson's day was filled with receptions, and there will be more today. She was showered with gifts, including a diamond studded wrist watch, by her classmates: a life membership and a jeweled club pin by the Illinois Women's Athletic Club; a small gold track shoe by her teammates; a diamond ring by her relatives, and a new roadster by her parents. Every year Amos spent his summer vacation gathering towns, carrying them back with him to study and examine through a winter of quiescent enjoyment. For though the col lecting of towns brought the deep and thrilling joy of discovery to Amos, it was the close and intimate study of them, set in the frame of memory, that completed and rounded his satisfaction. His greatest joy lay in the recalling of a bridge over the river at the edge of a sleepy village; the sharp redolence of new lumber, and the high, sharp song of the sawmill at the far end of the railfrom kitchen chimneys; and the shrill playing of children on the patch of green in the village square. All these things grew clearer and stronger with remembrance. On the long winter evenings the tiny black dots on the map before him were like lection; the close packed italics of immediate attention. Figures compiled from scattered areas throughout the wheat belt invariably point out the great saving made in using the newer method. A reduction is indicated from 50 to 60 per cent, including the depreciation on the more expensive machinery used. There is also considerable saving in the amount of grain lost through the various harvesting processes. Under the old method the grain lost amounted to about 5 per cent, while the newer method shows only an average loss of about 2½ per cent. Wheat production is a 12-month proposition. State agricultural colleges have developed by experimentation, that land ployed for weeds in July and kept free from weeds will produce on the average of three to five bushels an acre more. Now the tractor follows the combine While awaiting the drying dew on the wheat so the combine can start each morning, the farmer takes a few turns around the field already cut, with his tractor and plows. Where he has an extra tractor he puts a hand on it and plows right after the combine.

Being new at using this method of harvesting wheat, the farmer is too anxious to get into the fields before they are golden. Threatening summer clouds may bring a heavy down- final session of the annual Odd Felpour, often accompanied with hail or He sees the bumper crop rapidly dwindling, so he takes a chance on cutting just a little earlier than he should, the result being a marketed wheat with a high moisture content This is looked upon with suspicion by the elevator man and the miller. This moist wheat brings a dockage of 5 to 15 cents a bushel. The experienced combine operator takes his chance on waiting till the right time before he goes into the field, knowing that he can handle the lodged grain as well with the combine as by the older method. The chance that he took more than pays him for the higher price his grain brings at the elevator.

Learned to Market His Product No longer is the farmer dumping appointed by Mr. Adams are: Marck his wheat on the market. He has shal, Earl G. Alexander, Ithaca; conlearned a lesson or two in market-ductor, William Kluwpen, College ing. This year many of the farmers are selling enough wheat to pay the Clifton H. Clark, Endicott; herald, current harvesting expenses and J. Floyd Arthur, Carthage. holding the rest, waiting for the market to recover from the dumping of a good-sized percentage of the harvest all at one time. A considerable part of the wheat was held over almost the entire year, and sold only a short time before the beginning of this year's harvest.

Just as during the English dustrial revolution, which saw the migration of the worker from the country to the urban center so is hare of the credit for the fine show.

NEW DANUBE STEAMSHIP SERVICE INAUGURATED

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONIT VIENNA - The twentieth general meeting of the International Danube Commission, which has been sitting in the former Imperial Palace, has concerned itself almost exclusively with business details relating to shipping. The most important matter on the agenda was the second reading of an agreement between the commission and the states of Rumania and Jugoslavia preliminary to the inauguration of a special steamship service at the Iron Gate (near Orsova).

who are saving

vacation days for Indian summer

No question about it, it is the wise vacationist who waits for Indian Summer, most lavish of all seasons.

And wiser still is he who spends this ideal playtime in that bountiful region that is tributary to Detroit.

Go to Detroit. See "the most energetic city in the whole world," pulsing with industry, vibrant with the expression of new ideas. Then away to the north among the hills and lakes and woodland. Cool nights will bring you refreshing slumber. Chill, bracing morning air will rouse you to the joy of physical exertion on the links, the tennis court, in the saddle, in swimming and hiking.

Summer traffic is gone from the roads. Children are back at their school books. Michigan's most beautiful season, Michigan's elaborate and complete vacation facilities are reserved in Indian Summer for the fortunate, like yourself, who can wait and have waited for the greatest season of all.

STOCKS SOAR TO NEW HIGH PRICE LEVEL

After Some Selling Bulls Resume Operations With Vigor

NEW YORK, Aug. 28 (P) — High money rates had a restrictive effect on trading in today's stock market, but speculators for the advance retained ntrol of the price movement. New leaders were brought forward the amusement, chemical, food, metal, motor accessory and public utility groups. Early gains ranged from 1 to nearly points, with more than a dozen issues lifted to new high levels. There were several soft spots scattered throughout the list.

Call money renewed at 7½ per cent.
ss compared with 7 yesterday, and held steady at that figure throughout the early trading despite the calling of about $15,000,000 in bank loans. Bankers revised their maximum estimates of Labor Day currency demands from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000.

Revival of activity and strength in International Nickel, which soared nearly 6 points to 108½, the highest price on record, was one of the day's features. Biscuit shares continued to nal Biscuit extending its early adwance to 4½ points, while Loose-Wiles attained a new peak at 66½, up 2½. Fleischmann and American Beet Sugar also eclipsed their previous 1928 high prices.

New stock of the Consolidated Gas Company, which recently declared a 100 per cent stock dividend, was admitted to trading, running up from an opening price of 74 to 77. The old stock closed yesterday at 148.

R. H. Macy, selling ex-rights, opened at 134 and quickly mounted to 140¼, while the rights moved up from 247 to 259. Motor Products, United States Rubber first preferred, Stanley/Company of America, Adams Express and Commercial Investment Trust sold 4 mmercial Investment Trust sold 4 to 5 points higher.

General Motors and Radio failed to participate extensively in the upward movement but held firm around yesterday's final prices. General Electric rallied on the resumption of heavy buying in that issue, and United States Steel common touched 153 for the first time since last April.

Jersey Central broke 11% points to 300, and showed little recuperative power. International Harvester and Freeport Texas each fell about 5 points and Loft was able to make up only part of its early 4-point drop.

Demand sterling touched a new low level for the year at $4.84 !! level for the year at $4.5411.

The closing was strong. Enthusias-tic buying of many stocks was re-sumed as United States Steel equaled sumed as United States Steel equaled its previous high for the year at 154. Adams Express ran up 12, United States Rubber first preferred 8, and American Express, Victor Talking Ma-chine; Wright and Curtiss Aeros, and General Electric, 4 to 6 points. Inter-national Nickel crossed 109. Total sales Proproximated 3,200,000 shares.

Foreign exchanges opened steady, with sterling cables quoted unchanged at $4.854.
Trading covered a wide variety of issues in the bond market today, but the volume of sales was small, and prices were irregular. Maintenance of the money rates and calling of high money rates and calling of 15,000,000 in loans by banks were dis-price changes in the railroad group were fractional. St. Paul 5s of 2000, Wester, Maryland 4s, Great Northern 1½s and others sagged. Denver & Rlo Grande Western 5s were in demand at hightly higher levels, and Southern Pacific convertible 4s also improved. Firmness of Barnsdall 6s, which were in demand on reports of further petroleum discoveries in California, was a feature of the industrial group. Dold Packing 6s advanced more than points, but the turnover was small.

Dodge Brothers 6s and Public Service
by New Jersey 4½s were weak.
The foreign list was steady.

GOOD LEVELS FOR TRADE IN MIDDLE WEST

Outlook Is Favorable for Balance of Year—Crop Conditions Fine

CHICAGO, Aug. 28—Current conditions in the middle West continue to indicate a favorable outlook for the remainder of this year.

While the usual summer slump has been felt in many lines the decline in activity is less pronounced than at this time last year. The agricultural situation continues some sections of the middle West has prevented the corn from earing out properly, but in most localities conditions are excellent. Larger yields continue to be forecast for all classes of wheat.

Conditions in wholesale and retail merchandising lines, while showing the effects of some seasonal dullness, indicate that the depression of a president and the depression of a preside merchandising lines, while showing the effects of some seasonal duliness, in-dicate that the depression of a presidential election year has not materi-In the wholesale trade, practically all lines are reporting smaller volumes of business as compared with a few as follows: weeks previously, but in comparison with a year ago, gains and losses are about evenly divided.

Department store trade has declined in volume but is still ahead of a year ago. Chain stores have grown in number recently but the aggregate sales have fallen off moderately. As compared with the corresponding time last year, both the number of stores operating and the total volume of business have shown rather substantial increases.

Buying of automobiles in the middle West continues to contribute a sub stantial part toward the greatly in-creased activity in the motorcar in-dustry this year. This reacts favor-ably for manufacturers of automobile parts and equipment. The seasonal let-up in both of these lines has failed let-up in both of these lines has falled to develop to any great extent, and many companies are continuing at very nearly the same rate as in the spring. The stepping-up of Ford production is also regarded as a favor-

The steel industry is still moving in favorable channels with prospects for better prices in the near future. Steel ingot production schedules are holding about even, and no change in blast furnace output is planned.

Stock prices in the main body of issues have held fairly steady although radio and merchandising stocks continue to be in heavy demand at substantially higher prices. Continued firmness in call money has proved to be a disturbing influence from time to time for the stock market but there is seen no indication that there will be insufficient money in this

FAIR ACTIVITY IN PACKER HIDE MARKET

Prices Strong-Country and Frigorifico Trend Easy

The packer hide market experiences a fair volume of sales despite the fact that tanners continue to report only a moderate demand for leather.

Hide prices hold strong in the face of weakness in the leather market. Owing to the scarcity of good stock, advances were obtained on two specialty selections last week, native steers and heavy native cows, both of which sold up to 24c. The balance of the offerings held at steady figures.

Branded cows were weak at the be-Branded cows were weak at the be-ginning of last week but demand quickened enough to enable packers to get the listed price of 22c. while the usual summer stump has been felt in many lines the decline in activity is less pronounced than at this time last year.

The agricultural situation continues to be characterized by a very marked gain in crop prospects, and while the improvement is almost uniform the most striking increase is in the prospective corn crop. Lack of rain in some sections of the middle West has prevented the corn from earing out GALVESTON, Tex., Aug. 28 — With the season's grain movement nearing its peak, several vessels are loading. More than 1,250,000 bushels of wheat and other grains will be loaded out by September and some 500,000 bushels are scheduled to move out in the first week of September. This will materially reduce heavy stocks that have been accumulating and prevent the danger of congestion. Some 1850 cars have been accumulating unloading and elevators have had several million bushels in storage due to lack of available ocean tonnage.

CANADIAN CAR LOADINGS NEW YORK, Aug. 28 (49)—Governors of the New York Stock Exchange today voted to keep the Exchange open for trading on Saturday, Sept. 1. Members had petitioned for a closing. The New York Curb Market also will be open for trading on that data.

DEFICIT FOR AUSTRALIA

DEFICIT FOR AUSTRALIA

SYDNEY, Aug. 28—Deficit on the Commonwealth of Australia accounts for the year ended June 30 was approximately $24,200,000, due mainly to a considerable decline in customs and a substantial increase in expenditure. It is the first deficit since the present Government came into power, 5½ years ago. The treasurer had a windfall in the last month of the year in large increases in receipts from direct taxation income tax, land tax and estated duties, amounting to about $7,000,000. Otherwise the deficit would have exceeded $30,000,000.

If reorganzation and increased efficiency still left the British steel industry unable to compete with the Continent, then the Government might reasonably be asked to impose a tariff on imported steel, say these critics. Their reason for opposing any attempt to impose a steel duty at this time is that it would tend to maintain an unsound condition in the industry itself. Capital now refuses to enter the steel industry ecause of its disorganized condition, but experience in other lines indicates that with centralized control there would be slight difficulty in attracting needed funds for rehabilitating those plants which are worth bringing up-to-date.

Governor Smith and the Farmers

DEDUCED, apparently, to its lowest terms, Governor Smith's promised solution of the agricultural problem in the United States is simply that, if he is elected, he is going to ask a group of presumably capable and wellinformed citizens to advise him what to do about it.

It was not, of course, to have been expected that a public man whose experience had been so wholly urban should be able to make an important contribution to the literature of farming distress and its remedies. But since Mr. Peek and other representatives of farm organizations have been coming away from Albany, expressing gratification at what they heard there, the country naturally has been looking for something constructive in the Governor's speech of acceptance. What does it find?

Mr. Smith correctly states that the condition of agriculture is deplorable. He declares that the situation is injurious almost equally to the business of the Nation which must largely find support among the followers of agriculture. This is indubitable. He is careful to point out the incontrovertible fact that the Republican Party has done nothing as yet to solve this problem. He waxes cynical in his condemnation of the efforts of the Republican Congress to get legislation on the subject past the veto power of a Republican President, but he carefully and wisely refrains from saying whether in his judgment the measure vetoed, which incidentally was passed by the aid of Democratic votes, was wise or not. After thus detailing the menace of the situation as it exists, and the failure of the party in power to meet it, he makes this bright promise: "I propose to substitute action for inaction, and friendliness for hostility."

Unhappily, however, he refrains from specifying what shall be the nature of the action he is going to take. Except for the promise to ask farm leaders to confer with him as to what shall be done, he offers no suggestion, no radical remedy. He talks, as all merely casual students of this problem do talk, of an expansion of the basic idea of co-operative marketing, and the further development and cheapening of transportation. In his reference to the latter partial remedy he takes occasion to disavow his longtime and very determined advocacy of the New York barge canal as a route to the sea to be followed by an adequate ship canal, declaring he spoke thus only as the Governor of New York, but that as President of the United States he will give suitable attention to the St. Lawrence route, which he has hitherto ignored or

It may be doubted whether any public man of Governor Smith's genesis, who has during his public life had his attention so consistently fixed upon local issues, could formulate a plan for farm relief which would appeal not only to the farmers but to well-equipped students of that problem. It is not at all to his discredit that he has declined to put forth any complete project or to offer anything in the guise of a panacea. Indeed, it is rather another evidence of the innate frankness and occasional modesty of the man that his pronouncement on this subject should be in the nature of an admission of ignorance and the promise to call into consultation men better equipped to formulate a work-

But in comparison to Mr. Hoover's more definite proposal, and in the face of the reiterated assertion that all the professional farm agitators who have called upon the Governor of New York have come away enthusiastic with his grasp of the subject and the completeness of his program, the discussion of this topic in the speech of acceptance does seem to lead to a rather lame and impotent conclusion.

Canada's Legation at Paris

AFTER taking part in the signing of the Kellogg treaty for the elimination of war as an instrument of policy, the Prime Minister of Canada, Mackenzie King, will attend the sessions of the Council of the League of Nations and of the Assembly at Geneva. He has still another duty to perform in behalf of Canada. namely, the official opening of the Canadian Legation at Paris. Hitherto, Canada has maintained an office in Paris known as the High Commissioner's office, while France has been represented in Canada by a consul-general. Doubtless the success of the exchange of ministers between Canada and the United States helped to pave the way for a similar exchange between Canada and France. The Dominion Parliament last session provided for the establishment of the new legation in Paris: at the same time, the French legation is being established in Ottawa.

While but little criticism has been heard of this new step to broaden the channels of diplomatic relationship between Canada and France, some observers are inclined to wonder whether it is calculated to maintain unity in the foreign policy of the British Commonwealth. Experience is showing that the presence of Canadian and Irish Free State ministers in Washington is helpful to the British Embassy. There is no reason to believe that the Canadian legation in Paris will be anything but an influence for better understanding within the family of British nations, as well as in the larger League of Nations. It is in the firm belief that good relations will be further promoted that Canada's legation at Paris is being established.

Ethiopia Signs a Treaty

CIGNING of a Treaty of Friendship between Italy and Abyssinia at Addis Abeba must be regarded as an event of historic and great importance for the latter country. It is the first treaty of this nature to which Abyssinia has ever been a party and stamps this African monarchy with a new seal of sovereignty. Interestingly enough, it was Italy that was the first nation to recognize, in 1896, the independence of Abyssinia. Ten years later, England, France and Italy reached an agreement undertaking to preserve the integrity of Abyssinia. Under this agreement it was understood that none of the three should attempt to take the country, although at the same time they apportioned to themselves certain spheres of economic influ-

France, by this convention of 1906, received the strip from Addis Abeba to Djibouti, the port in French Somaliland, along which a railway started in 1897 was being built (completed in 1917). England received the district around Lake Tsana, source of the Blue Nile, and Italy the hinterland of Eritrea and a sweep westward of the capital and down toward Italian Somaliland. Things went along fairly satisfactorily until Abyssinia entered the League of Nations in 1923. The world having acknowledged thereby the full sovereign status of Abyssinia, the position of the three powers with their economic rights became somewhat anomalous.

Matters came to a head in 1925 when England wished to build a dam at Lake Tsana. An agreement between England and Italy, whose sphere of influence was adjoining, strengthened the economic privileges in their respective areas and went further than the general 1906 accord. Abyssinia objected. France supported Abyssinia's protest to the League. England and Italy explained away any aggressive intentions, and the Anglo-Italian propositions came to nought. Now Italy has signed a Treaty of Friendship with Abyssinia and given to it a free zone in the harbor of Assab, in Eritrea. Italy can also make a road from Assab to the Abyssinian frontier.

It would appear as if Italy by this act meant to regain the good graces of Ethiopia which had been to a certain extent lost through the pourparlers with England. France seems to regard with easy benevolence the signing of this treaty. France has always considered itself the special guardian of the sovereignty of Abyssinia, even though France was a signatory of the 1906 agreement. Italy has accomplished a successful political stroke in recapturing Abyssinia's favor, but the price, from the French point of view, is the further admission of Abyssinia's sovereignty. This treaty between two equal nations is another guarantee that Abyssinia's full independence will be respected by Italy. Of additional interest is the report from authoritative sources that large concessions have been given to French interests to develop the country just west of the capital, and that a new Franco-Abyssinian bank is likely before long to be founded.

From every point of view, Abyssinia has scored by this first treaty of friendship with a foreign power, and a new era of diplomatic activity opens up for this rich African monarchy.

Factory, or Reservoir?

TOPULAR misconceptions of the effects upon industry and trade of what is incorrectly termed "the export of capital" find expression in published warnings that the business interests of the United States are being injuriously affected by the loans of this alleged "capital" to other lands. In some quarters it is urged that the Federal Government should interfere to impose a limit on foreign loans, and in the event that no authority for such interference is found in existing law, the enactment of legislation giving the necessary powers is demanded.

These protests against lending "capital" must be distinguished from those against the shipment abroad of a considerable portion of the great quantity of gold brought to the United States as a result of the World War. That under present conditions, which seem to indicate that the reserves of the yellow metal upon which paper currency is based should be much larger than were believed a generation ago to afford safety to bank note holders, a diminution in gold holdings may to some small extent affect industrial and commercial credits is possible. Until it is realized that the fundamental of all business is not gold or silver, but mutual trust and confidence, the gold supply will continue as a disturbing factor. Fortunately, so far as the United States is concerned, the amount of the metal within its borders is more than sufficient for the great fabric of governmental and bank currency. As for the alleged injurious effects of exports of "capital," it can be sweepingly stated that these do not exist. "Capital" means wealththings produced by labor-devoted to the production of more wealth or useful services. Factory buildings and machinery are capital. Money is not capital, nor is currency, which is simply paper promises to pay money. Banks are not manufacturers of capital, but reservoirs into which trickle the millions and billions of dollars saved up by the people. When foreign bonds are sold to residents of the United States, the only "capital" that goes abroad is machinery, implements and other articles of that kind, in payment for which the proceeds of the loan are applied. The industries of the Nation have nothing to apprehend from the export of actual

Building Up the Merchant Marine

THE launching of another large vessel, the Virginia, of the International Mercantile Marine Company, supplies additional evidence of the earnest efforts of a few "shipminded" Americans to build up the American merchant marine. The new ship, the second of three, and possibly six, vessels projected for the Mercantile Marine's intercoastal line between New York and California, was commenced before the passage of the Jones-White Shipping Bill which, in itself, holds forth the promise of substantial aid to ships of United States registry.

While the new ships being built for the intercoastal trade, and the recently constructed Malolo for the San Francisco-Hawaii business, are not in a class, so far as size is concerned. with the giant liners being brought out by foreign nations for the transatlantic run, they furnish nevertheless encouraging indications of the trend toward a marine which will properly represent the United States, possessed as it is of the longest coast line of any of the maritime nations of the world.

It is but a step from the projecting of coastal and intercoastal ships to the building of transatlantic vessels, and under the more liberal terms of the shipping act recently made law ship operators are encouraged to proceed with ships for the routes from which formerly, due to excessive operating costs and the lack of any form of government aid or encouragement, they were debarred.

That the new intercoastal liners must pay $30,000 for each round trip transit through the canal is a factor which has aroused discussion of the possibility of reducing, or eliminating, tolls on such transits. The profit angle was not considered when the canal was built, its purpose being one of service rather than of making money for the Government. But it appears that existing treaties, notably the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty of 1901, in which it is agreed that there shall be no discrimination against the vessels of any nation in respect to "conditions or charges of traffic," preclude the possibility of making charges for United States ships lower than those for ships of other flags. Based upon a similar international agreement which exists in regard to the Suez Canal, its abrogation might result in retaliatory measures against United States ships passing through the canal. Hence, there appears small likelihood that Panama Canal tolls may be reduced against United States shipping, desirable though this might be from the standpoint of upbuilding the merchant marine.

The Campaign in North Carolina

TORTH CAROLINA'S attitude toward prohibition seems likely to determine largely whether that State will remain in the group comprising the "solid" South. The issue was raised there in the Democratic primary last June, and it has been projected into the present campaign. The outcome depends upon whether the cleavage caused by the Smith-Hull contest for delegates can be closed sufficiently before the November elections. If the Democrats can present a united front, statistics indicate that their victory will be assured.

In 1924 the vote for President in the State was: Davis, 284,270; Coolidge, 191,753; La Follette, 6,651. This represented a Democratic gain over the results in 1920, when Harding received 232,848 and Cox 305,447.

Since the last national election, North Carolina has undergone important social and educational changes; its industrial and economic progress has been probably more rapid than that of any other southern state; its political status also may be somewhat altered, due to the increased population. But if the wet presidential nominee loses the Old North State's vote, it will be because of a breach in the Democratic ranks.

Most of the Democratic candidates in North Carolina have acquiesced in the wet leadership of their party. Almost all the Democratic newspapers are supporting the entire ticket. These developments may be attributed more to what they consider political expediency than to a desire to nullify prohibition. Dry Democratic officeholders and editors thus find themselves insisting that the Republican platform is no drier than their party's, and that no President can repeal the Eighteenth Amendment even if he tries.

Senator Simmons so far has taken a different point of view. In the primary he led the campaign by which Cordell Hull defeated Governor Smith, although an uninstructed delegation was sent to Houston. He resigned from the Democratic National Committee shortly after the convention. There may have been other contributing factors, but the resignation came in such a way as to indicate that he could not support whole-heartedly a man whose nomination he had opposed so sincerely. His continued silence and his relinquishment of party leadership in the state campaign have emphasized that impression.

Prohibition advocates, meanwhile, are making a formidable protest against the Democratic nominee. The Asheville conventon last monthwhich was not confined to North Caroliniansshowed that a strong faction in that State and elsewhere will not accept the plea for party harmony in the presidential campaign. As one bishop explained, the church members are not trying to put their denominations into politics. They believe that the prohibition issue concerns "the moral and spiritual life of the people," and therefore should be defended by them. In several southern states the opponents of wet leadership have little chance to make their bolting effective; in North Carolina they can ally with the Republican Party, which has an efficient and harmonious organization. Apparently, that is what they intend to do.

Editorial Notes

According to the press of Japan, the prohibition sentiment is growing in that country, a nation-wide campaign being planned to increase this sentiment. The National Federation of Prohibitionists has the laudable object in view of making 500 villages dry in commemoration of the imperial coronation. This is in line with the recent action of the imperial household, which has ordered that there shall be no drinking among officers or men taking part in the coronation events.

The Kellogg treaty, which was signed about the time that several nations' armies were engaged in mock combats, will help to make a mockery of these demonstrations.

The new balloting machines being installed in New York City are preferable to the ones sometimes manipulated by politicians.

How a President Is Elected

THE crayon artist of the lyceum platform, who pictures an Alpine sunrise, then adds a few touches, turns the drawing upside down and discloses his product to be a portrait of a donkey and an elephant, works hardly more of a transformation on his easel than the people of the United States have wrought upon those sections of the Constitution which in 1787 first outlined the method of election of a President.

The members of the Constitutional Convention were very solicitous in their debates that every precaution should be taken against cabal. Possibility of intrigue was one of the arguments which turned them away from the plan of election by Congress, and even after the eventually successful proposal had been made of indirect election through "electors" one delegate questioned whether undue influence might not be practiced upon the electors during the six or eight months which might elapse between their 'appointment" and the casting of their ballots. But there had been nothing in the brief political ex-perience of the colonies, or of the republics in history with which they were acquainted, to give these nation-builders any intimation that in actual use the mechanism would be operated not by secret cabal of a small clique but by open and concerted action of thousands of citizens frankly aligned in two national parties to dictate into the votes of the electors their own popular choice.

In only two instances in the debates of the Constitutional Convention did the delegates apparently foresee anything even resembling the party system in presidential elections. James Madison declared if the State Legislatures were to elect the President they would "act with some kind of regular plan and promote the appointment of a man who would not oppose himself to a favorite object." Elbridge Gerry believed that in a popular election "the ignorance of the people would put it in the power of some one set of men"-he mentioned the order of the Cincinnati-"dispersed through the Union and acting in concert, to delude them into any appointment."
Yet the Constitution had hardly been ratified before party alignments began to form. They were visible in the second election, for while there was unanimity for the re-election of President Washington, there were active party contests in nearly every state over the choice of electors on the issue of their prospective vote for Vice-President. Federalist electors adhered to Vice-President Adams and those appointed by the Republicans cast their second votes for George Clinton, Governor of New York.

The Nation never had an opportunity to see what kind of a President the members of the electoral college would give it if allowed to survey a field of numerous candidates with calm detachment and say, "Here is our most able man; he shall be President." How such a choice would be received nowadays and how the electors would ever get together on a majority candidate without the guidance of nominating conventions is not encouraging to contemplate. In the campaign which followed Washington's announcement of his retirement, only eight years after the founding of the Government, the two parties had their tickets of electors in the field with a definite understanding that Federalist electors would vote for Adams and Republican electors for Thomas Jefferson.

So definite was this supposition that when a Pennsylvania Federalist elector joined the Republican majority of electors from his state and voted for Jefferson, one of his supporters protested in a public letter that he did not vote for an elector to determine for him who ought to be President. "I choose him to act, not to think," he said. This has been the attitude of voters ever since. No other case is recorded in 125 years of elections since in which an elector has violated his implied party pledge.

Originally the electors cast two votes each without designating which man they intended for President and which for Vice-President, the Constitutional provision being that the man receiving the highest number should be President and the man receiving the next highest, Vice-President. When parties agreed upon a ticket of two | nominees but also the choice of nominees.

men, there was an imminent possibility that all its electors would vote for both and place them in a tie.

That was what happened in the fourth election under the system, when Aaron Burr, whom the Republicans intended for Vice-President, received the second votes of all the electors who voted for Jefferson. Neither having a majority, the matter, according to the Constitution, was thrown into the House of Representatives. There through efforts of the Federalists to embarrass the winning party it seemed for a time that the intentions might be upset, and it was only after six days of balloting and bickering in the House that a majority of states was given to Jefferson, whom the electors supposed they were choosing President. Activities of Alexander Hamilton in this and previous campaigns to arrange the allocation of the Federalist electors' votes had brought about an estrangement between himself and Adams which contributed to the eventual disappearance of the Federalist Party.

1 1 1 To prevent a repetition of the Jefferson-Burr episode, or worse, the Constitution was amended to provide that the electors designate their choice for President and for Vice-President, and that the votes should be counted

By this time there was need of some machinery for choosing the party candidate, not only that the electors might know whom to center their votes upon, but also that campaigners might have a figure to point to with the invitation, "This is the man we offer for President." Caucuses of the party's Senators and Representatives in Congress supplied at first that nominating machinery in both parties, beginning as early as the campaign of 1800. The Republicans, now coming to be called the Democratic-Republican Party, later to adopt only the first name, continued to nominate by congressional caucus until the administration of Andrew Jackson.

Other methods, however, began to be urged. Sections of the party not represented in Congress demanded a voice. The first national political convention took place in 1812 when a New York wing of the Democratic-Republicans, joined by what Federalists were left, nominated De Witt Clinton in a gathering in New York City.

The campaign of 1824 saw a new method of nomination invoked, that by State Legislatures. Such indorsements were given to John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay, while number of local conventions put forward General Jackson, and a small congressional caucus nominated William H. Crawford.

Eight years later, with Jackson in the saddle, "King Caucus" was permanently banished. All candidates then were nominated by national conventions of the parties, and the practice has continued uninterruptedly.

One important variation, however, has taken place in the makeup of national conventions. It is the use in seventeen states, of the presidential primary, by which the voters may select or instruct their delegates to the conventions. Originally, and in most states yet, the delegates were chosen in local conventions made up from county and precinct caucuses which might or might not accurately represent popular sentiment.

The presidential primary was first adopted in Wisconsin in 1905 in a law for direct election of delegates. Pennsylvania and Oregon added to the plan a provision for the expression of preference directly upon presidential candidates. At one time twenty-five states had some form of the law, but in seven it has been repealed or declared unconstitutional and in one its use is optional.

In the opinion of many, the primaries proved their usefulness in this year's nominating campaign as barometers of public sentiment, particularly in the case of the Republican Party in Massachusetts, where the law was amended to permit an unrestricted direct preference vote, and in Ohio, Indiana, California, West Virginia and New Hampshire. An apparently growing favor for the presidential primary offers a prospect that in the future the popular vote may determine not only the choice between towns kept diaries, that for Fontainebleau on a certain day about this time of the year, but in 1529, witnessed the completion of a chapel built by King François I. Other entries would show the arrivals and departures at a much later date of the "sun King" Louis XIV. Finally, turning a new page, we would observe that this ancient place has "become an American college town" owing to the arrival of some 300 students to study at the American Conservatory of Music lodged in the Louis XV wing of the famous château. Concerts are given in the Salle du Jeu de Paume. What would the French kings think if Fontainebleau's diary of today were read them? On the other hand, these Americans who come in summer time for study think it quite natural and absorbingly interesting to read how the court was kept and the games played in their castle by former lodgers, kings and emperors. Napoleon spent large sums of money on its decoration. 1 1 1

Once upon a time, four-in-hand coaches were not an unusual sight in France, but they are now so seldom seen that when a few of them journeyed together from Paris to Deauville the novelty of such "tourisme hippomobile" was appreciated throughout the land. The old times revived, remarked everyone who had the opportunity to watch them rolling grandly along the roads. The way was pleasant. At Rambouillet, those in the coaches saluted the château where the Presidents of France pass their summers. At Evreux, they found an inn of unique charm and recalled the town was named after an Englishman, a certain Devereux. At Conches, they counted twenty-seven stained-glass windows in the church. At Lisieux, they hunted out the portal in the twelfth century cathedral described by Ruskin as "one of the most quaint and interesting doors in Normandy." And so came finally to Deauville, where many fashionable people bathe in summer, and which is but a river's width from Trouville, where the beach is even finer.

This headline in a Paris newspaper is memorable: 'Majestic Lands 1000 at Cherbourg; Ten Come to Paris by Plane." It marks a halfway stage between the quartercentury ago, when the public knew nothing of flying, and a quarter-century to come when it is forecast that the "1000" will come to Paris by airplane. This rapid transportation of passengers from Cherbourg is relatively new, but it seems likely to become most popular. The journey up from the port by train is a pleasant enough ride of more than six hours when holidaying, but the charm of timbered cottages, meandering streams, and hills draped with small fields is often lost in the bustle of getting to Paris. Commercial flying of this order is making progress here; besides this service from Cherbourg a regular route has just been opened from Paris to Biarritz, via Bordeaux, in the southwestern corner of France.

"Madame," questioned a Paris newspaper of a certain lady of the highest society, "do you put your address on your visiting cards?" The question was repeated to others and the replies were published. As a result, it may be concluded it is a matter of personal taste, depending on whether you preferred to be allied with the conservative school of social tendencies, or the modern. One Countess agrees she goes against all traditions and has her address on her cards, but times have changed and the circle of friends has grown larger. Undoubtedly, the address is

PARIS | useful and warranted now. On the other hand, a Marchioness thinks to the contrary, recalling it was never thus in the past. During the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries visiting cards were often the work of artists who thought so highly of them that they signed the cards as a master would a painting. The Marchioness recalls finding not long ago in an old château of Champagne at the bottom of a Louis XV dressing table a narrow sachet studded with small roses. In it were a linen handkerchief bordered with point d'Angleterre and three cards. Around the edge of the cards were arabesques of flowers supported by doves, and on the cards was the name "La Comtesse de Berchény." There was no address on the cards.

. 1 . 1 If you should ever eat a Portuguese oyster in France, think of Hector Patoizeau, and realize the oyster in question never came from Portugal, but that its ancestors did. It was Captain Patoizeau, bound from Lisbon, 1868, in his good ship Morlaisien, who was responsible for the sea food before you. He brought oysters from Portugal and dumped them in the sea off Marennes. These multiplied until today the Portuguese oysters of Marennes are a Parisian delicacy. A plaque has now been unveiled in the château d'Oléron, situated on the island of Oléron, which faces Marennes, commemorating the act of Captain Patoizeau. It is one of the delightful features of the coast along the Bay of Biscay that every small place has its quaint tale to tell.

The court was silent, save for the scratching and spluttering of a pen. The judge shook his head; the members of the jury moved restlessly. They were all accustomed to the noisy tracks of the little pen across paper: it had made the same sound in the days of Rabelais. There! the "greffier," or clerk of the court, had caught up with the proceedings, and the plaintiff's lawyer continued his questioning. Cases came to light involving many foreigners on similar charges, and from the long accounts of the trials emerged the feeling among the foreigners, shared by the French, that the greffiers should give way to competent secretaries operating typewriters. The greffiers belong, however, to an ancient guild, indeed, a powerful guild. Membership passes from father to son, or to a relative of the family, and the privilege of copying by hand all the records of the court is much esteemed. There may be grumbling at the time wasted in making an art of what is properly secretarial work, but the custom is, after all, part of the Gobelinesque aspect and character of the venerable courts by the Seine, and one which will not soon be altered.

Railroads and Prohibition

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

I have a friend who is conductor on the Southern Railroad. I met him on the street recently and the about the article in the Monitor in which a railroad conductor gave his testimony as to the great change since prohibition. He confirmed this testimony most emphatically and said if most old conditions were to reappear, e thought he would give up his job!
